The poor miser

Trace and write

There was once a miser. He melted all his money into a block of gold and buried it, in a pit. Everyday he would dig it up and smile to see it. One night the gold block was stolen. So, the miser was in tears. A friend of his saw him weeping and said, "You should bury a stone in the pit and look at it every day. You never spent money when you had it, so was it any better than a stone?"

Our national emblem

King Ashoka was a great warrior and ruled over a huge empire. But later in life, he became a Buddhist. He spread the Buddha's message all over his kingdom and into other regions of South Asia. Our national emblem, the Ashoka Chakra or the Wheel of Dharma, comes from the Lion Capital of Ashoka. This capital was erected on top of a pillar at a place called Sarnath. A pillar exactly like this one exists in Thailand. The Ashoka Chakra also appears on many of the remains from the emperor's time, and it is also a part of our national flag.
